When Mary saw John for the first time walking down the street it was like she got struck by lightning. She felt her blood pulsating through her body like she never had before. After following him for a while, she finally made up her mind and introduced herself. Their story started like that. They began to go out and after some dates, it was clear that they had fallen in love with each other. Mary had never felt so happy in whole her life, even though she had the vague feeling he was hiding something from her.

After the first time they had slept with each other he broke the silence and confessed it to her: "Mary, I have one."

THE NEW JULIE COLLECTION

When Mary saw John for the first time walking down the street it was like she got struck by lightning. She felt her blood pulsating through her body like she never had before. After following him for a while, she finally made up her mind and introduced herself. Their story started like that. They began to go out and after some dates, it was clear that they had fallen in love with each other. Mary had never felt so happy in whole her life, even though she had the vague feeling he was hiding something from her.

After the first time they had slept with each other he broke the silence and confessed it to her: "Mary, I have a girlfriend and am getting married in one month." It was like a punch in the stomach. She was sure nobody would love her like she did, but John had made his decision and nothing would have made him change his mind. Mary knew he was the love of her life and she had to get him back by any cost.

On the day of wedding she went to the ceremony and when the priest said: "Speak now or forever hold your peace", she spoke: "John you can't do this. I don't want to lock myself in a prison and pretend to be happy. Do you still love me? If yes, then I come with me now you will regret it forever." After that, Mary ran away crying. It was then that John, to the surprise of everyone, left his girlfriend's car alone and ran after her. Since then Mary and John have lived happily and contently.
